DEMOCRATIC TERRITORIAL CONVENTION.

The Democratic Territorial convention, which met in Tucson on Wednesday, was a love feast. Time and time again some obstreperous delegate attempted to create a disturbance, but the convention would not have it. When Tom Farish, of Maricopa, attempted to limit the members of committees to seven, instead of choosing one from each county, and Dr. Ford, of the same county, induced him to withdraw from that position, the last chance for a "scrap" went glimmering, and from that time on motions were made by acclamation, nominations unanimous, and a flood of harmonious oratory was poured out upon the convention, amid the cheers of the enthusiastic delegates.

That Col. Wilson was to be the nominee was firmly believed several days ago, when the result of the Maricopa convention was learned. This was the turning point and the Shannon delegates simply went to Tucson hoping against fate that something might occur to cause a cog to slip in the Wilson machine.

But after several caucuses were held among the delegates of the south it was soon evident that Shannon would fall short of his nomination and two Shannon supporters waited on Col. J. F. Wilson at his quarters at the Orndorff hotel, and notified him of his intention to withdraw. That Col. Wilson was the logical candidate to lead the democratic party this fall has been conceded even by those who were not his supporters during the campaign for the nomination. Warm ties of personal friendship bound many of the prominent leaders of the democratic party to Charlie Shannon, who up to the last, did their utmost to secure him the nomination.

The argument that Col. Wilson was the logical candidate, was supported by the sentiment created with the rank and file of the party, that he was justly entitled to the nomination of the party two years ago, not that they charged Mark Smith with securing his nomination by unfair means, but the people thought that Col. Wilson was entitled to a second term as a reward for faithful services performed and from that day until the date of this convention a determined effort has been made to secure him the nomination.

With the democrats united on the logical candidate of the party, and the convention a perfect sea of harmony, the democrats of Arizona may expect to elect their candidate for that office.

Col. Wilson has represented Arizona in congress for two years and his good record speaks for itself. He is untiring in his efforts at Washington and it was during his term in congress that the first steps were taken looking toward the building of the San Carlos reservoir site. Col. Wilson has the endorsement and entire confidence of the laboring class in Arizona. His record and utterances on all matters of legislation effecting this class is clear and he will receive their vote to a man.

The platform of the party is free of all quibbling or generalities. It goes straight to the point on all matters in which the great majority of voters in Arizona are interested. It is overflowing with good democratic doctrine, and while several members of the committee on platform and resolutions questioned the advisability of giving the convention the aspect of a legislature, still Col. Wilson wishes in the matter were carried out, and he goes before the people standing squarely on the platform of his party, of which he endorses heartily every single plank.

The platform of the democratic party will please the voters of Arizona.

ATTITUDE OF THE MINE OPERATORS.

After a conference of the presidents of the anthracite coal-carrying companies yesterday this statement was given to the public by the president of one of the interested roads:

"The operators are a unit in standing by their original position. The situation at the mines is improving daily. A few more men are applying to be taken back every day, but when the work will be actively resumed I will not undertake to say, however, that no interference by any outside parties, no matter how highly we may esteem the parties themselves, will have any effect. The matter at issue can only be settled between the operators and the miners."

The declaration is coupled with an allusion to "the well-meant attempt of people of high standing in the community, but who are not business men, to bring up the question of arbitration again."

This, then, is the response of the mine operators to the public appeal for the abatement of a public peril—for measures looking to the termination of a dangerous and distressing strike. The coal operators are aware that the miners stand ready to arbitrate. They are aware that the strike has become a matter of serious moment, not only to the miners, but to coal consumers. They have been informed by the action of the National Civic federation and of individuals of national prominence that public interests calls for a change of attitude on their part.

Their reply is a flat refusal to take any steps looking towards arbitration. The request for action on behalf of the general public they stamp as "interference." The effort of the individuals who asked only that the questions at issue be opened up to consideration is contemptuously alluded to as the "well-meant attempt" of persons who, it is implied, are incapable of judging the situation as business men.

The operator's statement speaks for itself. In substance it is an insolent denial that they have any responsibilities of the general public which they need consider above their own interests. It implies a purpose to carry the strike through to the end, forcing the miners into complete submission and finally imposing the operators' own terms. Surely the time has come to exercise some governmental restraint over the defiant combination. If the antitrust law will not fit the case then there is need for laws which will fit it.

NOT ALL LIARS.

Western Investments, a journal published somewhere on the coast, a week ago printed an article under the partially alliterative headline, "Arizona's Accomplished Liars." It relates mostly to those who lie about mining properties. Such liars we always have with us and so has every mining region had from the earliest times. There are a great many people who doubt the commonly accented story in its entirety of the gold mines of Ophir. It is easier to lie about a mine than anything else because men cannot see below the surface of the ground. But the liar is no more numerous in Arizona according to the population of the territory than he is any where else. The Oil Mining and Finance of Los Angeles takes the fight off our hands and ably defends those Arizonians who are not liars.

Says Oil, Mining and Finance: "Why Arizona's Accomplished Liars? Why not California's, Nevada's, Montana's, Michigan's, Australia's, South Africa's? Arizona is peopled with folks that have gathered from every portion of the union; its population represents the average intelligence and morality the country over. It has some very good people and some very bad, with, like every other division of the union, a great body of people between these extremes, who are from 'fair to middlin' in their daily conduct. In its mining camps, on its cattle ranges and as members of its communities are men and women from the best homes of the eastern and southern states, and in proportion to the population, as many religiously trained and college-bred people may be found as in the state of New York. Business obligations are as well kept and failures as few as in any western state or territory. There is absolutely nothing in the character of the people or in their course in life to justify the conclusion among them the liar reaches abnormal development, and such a conclusion is the unreasonable one of an unreasoning mind."

The champion concludes as follows: "The time has passed for flippant reference to the mineral wealth of Arizona or for taking 'just naturally' every statement which involves a handsome valuation of a mineral property as more or less a figment of the imagination. The real production and the results developed by mine workings demonstrate that the territory is one of the richest mineral regions, area considered, in the entire world. A mining territory which has produced in less than a score of years copper to the value of approximately $159,000,000, and which in 1900 an output of precious metals worth more than $21,000,000 may be presumed to have many very valuable mineral properties."—Republican.

The Miner will prove the biggest "boomerang" in the history of the republican party in Cochise county. Leaders of that party know it and are fighting shy of the Miner "sanctum."
